School of Theology and Ministry

Tenure Track Faculty Position in Religious Education and Contextual Education (Open Rank)

Boston College's School of Theology and Ministry (STM) seeks to appoint a tenure-track professor in Religious Education with a focus in youth and young adult faith. The professor in this position also oversees the Contextual Education Program; rank is open. This appointment will be within the STM's Department of Religious Education and Pastoral Ministry (DREPM), to begin Fall 2021. More information on Boston College, the School of Theology and Ministry can be found at www.bc.edu/stm.

Position Qualifications

Candidates should have a PhD in Religious Education or a closely related field. Experience and expertise in supervised ministry and curriculum development for ministerial field experience is required. Candidates should possess a commitment to theological education for lay and ordained ministry; familiarity with Roman Catholic polity and pastoral life is essential.

Candidates should be prepared to teach courses in the following areas: theory and practice of ministry with youth and with young adults, developmental theories, conversations across differences, and contextual education (field experience).
